From major to minor products there is such a vast number of options that the situation can easily get mind boggling. To make matters worse if you consult friends you will get as many different suggestions as you have friends. If you start observing cars to see what others are doing then again you will not see a constant trend that you can take up as well. In any case you do not want to do anything that is very common and your effort should reflect your own personal style and taste. Then you also have to consider the budget you have for the purpose and the time you can devote to the tasks of identifying products, evaluating options, making a final choice, buying the products and then getting them installed. And then you have to wait to know if you got it right or not. Suddenly doing up your car instead of being a fun task seems a lot of work. Well not really. If you have a limited budget and limited time you can choose a simple option. Go for new tail lights.
